WITH ERROR CORRECTION

After a two-day referendum returned an overwhelming defeat to the proposed Bosnian peace plan, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic pronounced the plan dead. The Vance-Owen peace plan called for Bosnia-Herzegovina to be divided into 10 ethnically centered provinces, with territories going to each of the three warring factions, the Serbs, Croats and Muslims. It would also require extensive peace keeping efforts from the United Nations. But General Ratko Mladic, command of the Bosnian Serb army, scoffed at the possibility of U.N. intervention. "If they bomb me," said Mladic said, "I'll bomb London."

WITHOUT ERROR CORRECTION

After a two-day referendum returned an overwhelming defeat to the proposed Bosnian peace plan, Bosnian Serb leader Radovan Karadzic pronounced the plan dead. The Vance-Owen peace plan called for Bosnia-Herzegovina to be divided into 10 ethnically centered provinces, with territories going to each of the three warring factions, the Serbs, Croats and Muslims. It would also require extensive peace keeping efforts from the United Nations. But General Ratko Mladic, command of the Bosnian Serb army, scoffed at the possibility of U.N. intervention. "If they bomb me," said Mladic said, "I'll bomb London."